The REAL STUFF

It was a few days before Thanksgiving and Mickey Mouse had a happy idea.

"Let's have a Thanksgiving festival," he suggested to Donald, Goofy, and the others. "We can give our show in the little theater in the park. It ought to be a lot of fun for everyone."

They were all delighted at the thought. During the next few days the neighborhood fairly buzzed with activity. Donald Duck practised up on his magic tricks. Panchito played his guitar for hours at a stretch. Joe Carioca got out his accordion. But Goofy only looked worried.

"Gawrsh, Mickey," said Goofy. "I don't know what to do."

"You can be in a skit with us," said Mickey. "None of the others has thought to use anything about Thanksgiving. So you, Clarabelle, Minnie, and I can work up something about the Pilgrims' Thanksgiving. We'll give 'em some real stuff so folks will remember what Thanksgiving Day is. Come with me now. We've got half a log cabin to build."

Goofy was puzzled. "Didn't they have whole houses?" he asked.

"I mean for stage scenery, stupid," laughed Mickey. "I'll show you."

Soon the two were busy with hammer and saw. They stretched canvas taut between boards and painted it to look like logs, the exterior of the cabin. They cut out a door and window, and braced the window ledge. They worked hard.

Meanwhile Minnie and Clarabelle were busy, too. They made pies. They stuffed and roasted a big turkey. Ferdie and Morty, the little nephews, smelled the good food and came into the kitchen.

"Are we going to eat all this good stuff for dinner tonight?" Morty asked.

"No," answered Minnie. "It's to be used in the Thanksgiving play."

"In the play?" echoed Morty.

"That's right," replied Minnie.

"And we're not going to be in it?" asked Ferdie.

"That's right," replied Minnie again. The two little nephews swallowed hard and ran outdoors.

"That's NOT right, it's WRONG," sobbed Ferdie.

"We'll have to figure out a way to get IN that play, so we can get some of it," said Morty. "And I think we can do it." He whispered in his brother's ear and a big smile broke over Ferdie's face. There surely was mischief afoot.

The next day was the day of the Thanksgiving festival. The little theater was filled to capacity. Donald's magic tricks went off well. Panchito made a big hit with his guitar and songs. Joe Carioca played his accordion well. It was now time for the last specialty number, "The Pilgrims' Thanksgiving."

Behind the lowered curtain, Mickey and Goofy set up the painted log cabin. They brought out a rough wooden table. Then Clarabelle and Minnie brought the turkey and the pies and put them inside the false cabin. Mickey and Goofy hurried offstage, to put on their Pilgrim costumes. And unknown to everyone, a strange figure sneaked up and hid behind the bushes on the stage.

The curtain was raised. The act began. Clarabelle carried the turkey from the cabin as though it had just been roasted, and placed it on the table outside the door. Minnie, still inside the cabin, placed her pies on the window sill as though they had just been baked and were set there for cooling.

Suddenly Clarabelle looked up. She saw a tall, blanketed figure with a headband of feathers peering around the corner of the cabin. This was something that wasn't in the play. It must be real!

"Indians!" yelled Clarabelle.

The Indian grabbed for the pie. Clarabelle grabbed for the broom. She swung it right and left. Wham! Whack!

"Eek! I broke him in half!" screamed Clarabelle, and promptly fainted, as Morty who had been standing on Ferdie's shoulders, lost his balance and tumbled to the ground.

Mickey, Goofy, and Minnie rushed out on the stage. They revived Clarabelle and picked up Ferdie and Morty, who were tangled in their feathers and blanket, looking very scared at what they had done.

The curtain went down, but the applause kept up for a long time. The audience loved the surprise ending and thought it was all a part of the act. And when Mickey heard the whole story from Ferdie and Morty, he hadn't the heart to punish them. Instead, he sat them down at the table and let them enjoy the feast.

Mickey sighed, as he thought of the turn of events. "I did so want to make it seem like the real stuff," he said.

Ferdie and Morty looked at each other and smiled blissfully as they downed another mouthful.

"We like it better this way," they said, "'cause we're getting the real stuffing!"

PLUTO, THE RESCUE DOG, MUST GO THROUGH THE DEEP, TREACH'ROUS MOUNTAIN SNOW!

ALAS! POOR PLUTO DOES NOT SEE THE STEEP CLIFF'S EDGE! OH! GOLLY GEE!

HE TUMBLES DOWN -- FLIPPITY FLOP! THE KEG SINKS WITH A CRASHING

PLOP!

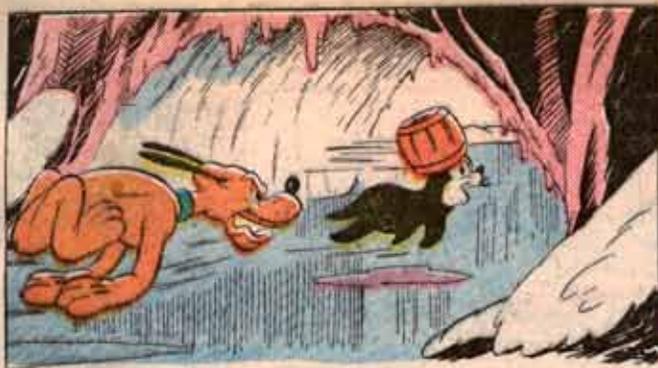

A SEAL IS STAGGERED BY THE BLOW! HE RISES UP FROM FAR BELOW!

THE FRIENDLY SEAL WOULD LIKE TO PLAY! BUT PLUTO BARKS, "SCRAM! GO AWAY!"

THE SEAL IS FULL OF MISCHIEF AND HE GRABS THE KEG AND HEADS FOR LAND!

TOWARD AN ICE CAVE IN THE HILL THE TWO RACE RECKLESSLY, UNTIL---

--POOR PLUTO SKIDS AND STUMBLES!

CRASH!

BREAKS THROUGH THE ICE WITH SICK'NING SMASH!

DISMAYED, THE WORRIED SEAL SOON SEES PLUTO IS SNAGGED! HE'LL DROWN OR FREEZE!

THE SEAL PULLS HARD, WITH ALL HIS MIGHT! AND OUT COMES PLUTO! WHAT A SIGHT!

THE LIQUID FROM THE KEG BREAKS UP THE ICE AROUND THE FROZEN PUP!

THE SEAL KNOWS THAT ALL DANGER'S PAST WHEN PLUTO OPENS HIS EYES AT LAST!

AND NOW THEIR FRIENDSHIP'S STRONG AND TRUE! 'CAUSE RESCUE DOGS NEED RESCUE, TOO!
